"Managing employee is kind of challenging, particularly for the young and talented employees. They could suddenly resign and make HR managers confused in finding a way or method to hold employees "

(HRD Vice President of Star Energy-Indonesia Energy Company)

Less attention to generation gap in company will make some of them not so interested to recruit young people, it results high recruitment costs and the worst consequence is the difficulty in finding the right employees.

(Research Paper of Wipanut Venique Govitvatana, Graduate Student in Training and Development at University of Wisconsin-Stout)

Seniors at their company state that some young people who work in their company are very self-centered. They are less persistent so that they behave like "fleas" and less self-disciplined. For young people, seniors in their company are the ones who speak one direction only, tend to be afraid of change and need more time to make decisions

(Renald Khasali in Jawa Post, 19th November 2012 Edition)
